This Month's Cover

(see accompanying story, this issue)

SPODE FITZHUGH — (Lowestoft)—The center of this design is the Chinese symbol of good luck surrounded by the four seasons. This pattern was originally shipped to America and England from the Chinese port of Foochow. A New England sea captain's wife, unable to understand the name, called it "Fitzhugh". Replacements of the original Chinese sets were made by Spode of his famous Lowestoft body in the early 1800's. The pattern is particularly fitting for the dignity of the 18th Century dining rooms. It has been carried down from the early days and is being reproduced today.

SPODE BUTTERCUP—First made in the early 1800's—the shape is Chelsea Wicker which came from the old Chelsea factory when it was dismantled. It has continued to be used generation after generation and is being reproduced today. It is particularly suited to the mahogany of Chippendale, Sheraton, and Duncan Phyfe, and is also attractive against pine or maple.

SPODE — Its History and Identification Marks

by Elsie Walker Butterworth

TO china collectors, the mark of SPODE on a piece of china conveys recollections of the corner cupboards of our great-grandmothers, filled with this fine old ware, and gives a zest to the art of collecting—a challenge to possess some of the lovely pieces originated by one Josiah Spode who began his career as a youth of sixteen years. True, he was apprenticed to that master craftsman, Thomas Whieldon, who, to quote from an old journal:

"1749 Hired Siah Spode to give him from this time to Martlemas, April 9 next, 2s.3d. or 2s.6d. if he Deserves it." (two shilings threepence, about 56¢ in our money); "2d yr. 0.2s.9d.; 3d yr. 0.3s.3d; Pd full earnest 0.10s." (ten shillings about $2.50 our money.) He of course, received bed and board and clothing but not much pocket money!

Josiah Spode was born in 1733, making him but sixteen years old when "hired" by Whieldon, under whom he served. About 1770 he took over the works at Stoke (Stoke-upon-Trent) Staffordshire, later to become the founder of the famous house which produced this beautiful ware. This factory at Stoke had been carried on by Messrs. Turner, or Turner & Bank.

About 1784 he introduced transfer printing. This was an endeavor to increase production, using copper plates rather than hand printing. The method of printing from copper engravings had already been in use for sometime, but was confined largely to pastoral scenes done on small plates. Spode created the lovely blue and white designs so much sought after today. No doubt this can be attributed to his association with William Copeland of London, a native of Stoke, who was in the tea trade, and necessarily was familiar with Chinese porcelains. He is credited with having suggested the Chinese patterns and Spode excelled in the beautiful blue and white willow ware. He was the first to introduce this blue underglaze printing. Thomas Minton, also one of the masters in producing chinaware engraved a special willow pattern for him. Spode also made toby jugs, black bassaltes and Egyptian red teapots. Copeland offered to undertake the sale of Spode's goods to his customers. The enterprise proved to be very successful and they took over a warehouse in Fore Street, Cripplegate, London, for the general sale of Spode's wares. Trade increased and in 1779 Copeland became a partner and purchased the property at 37 Lincoln's Inn Fields, where an immense depot for the sale of pottery goods was opened. This was managed by Copeland, the manufacturing of the pottery being entirely in the hands of Spode. Later Spode's son was taken into the business and he for a time was in the London house, but subsequently returned to Staffordshire and devoted himself to the manufactory.

About 1800 Spode commenced to make porcelain in addition to earthenware, and was the first to use felspar in its composition. In 1805 he introduced an opaque porcelain known as "Ironstone China" which he made and exported in large quantities. In 1806 His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, visited the works and Spode was appointed potter to him. These products were of the highest quality of the time, in body, in glaze and in decoration, in fact they ranked with the best of the period. In 1817 Queen Charlotte went to Stoke especially to see the beautiful wares now become famous.

The first partnership was Spode and Copeland, then Spode, Son and Copeland; upon the death of the elder Spode it again became Spode and Copeland, and next on the son of Copeland being taken into the business, it became Spode, Copeland & Son, and was carried under this name until 1826 upon the death of the elder Copeland. In 1827 the second or son of Josiah Spode the founder, died and he was succeeded by his son, being the third Josiah Spode, who survived his father but two years and died in 1829. Until 1833 the business was carried on by the executors of the third Josiah Spode of Hawksyard and Mr. Alderman Copeland, Lord Mayor of London 1835-36. Mr. Alderman William Taylor Copeland, shortly afterwards took into partnership his principal salesman and correspondent, Thomas Garrett. The firm then became Copeland and Garrett, and was so continued until 1847, when a dissolution of the partnership took place and from then until 1867 the name was "W. T. Copeland—late Spode." In that year, Copeland took his four sons into the partnership and it then became W. T. Copeland & Sons.

About 1846 Parian was developed and its discovery is attributed to this firm. It was in fact a development of the old and famous Derby biscuit ware, made finer and with more artistry, and Messrs. Copeland were successful in making it available commercially. The sculptor Gibson is said to have suggested it to the Copelands. From this time it was made by other pottery manufacturers, but by Copelands more than the others.

The following are dates given when some of the most celebrated printed patterns were introduced: "Castle" 1806; "Roman" 1811; "Turk" 1813; "Milkmaid", "Dagger-Border", "Tower", "Peacock" and "New Temple" 1814; "New Nankin", "New Japan", and "India" 1815; "Italian" and "Woodman" 1816; "Blossom" and "Pale Broselely" 1817; "Waterloo" and "Arcade" 1818; "Lucano" and "Ship" 1819; "Panel Japan", "Geranium" and "Oriental" 1820; "Font" and "Marble" 1821; "Bud and Flower", "Sun", "Bonpot", and "Union" 1822; "Double Bonpot", "Blue Border" and "Filigree" 1823; "Image" and "Persian" 1824; "Etruscan" and "Bamboo" 1825; "Blue Imperial" and "Union Wreath" 1826.

Among their finest works in Parian, both statuary and busts, are "Infancy of Jupiter", "Lady Godiva", "Nora Creina", "Flute Player", "Reading Girl", busts of "A Mother" and "Love"; "Young England" and "Young England's Sister" (a pair), "Before the Ball" and "After the Ball", "Prosperity" and "Adversity", "A Shepherd Boy", "Spring", "Summer", "Master Tom", "On the Seashore", "Ino and Bacchus", "Chastity", "Santa Filomena", "Night", and "Morning."

Spode also made Satsuma ware and painted and enamelled tiles for interior decoration.

Thus the youth who saw visions in clay, rose to a position that enabled him, to quote Kipling, "to walk with Kings nor lose the common touch." Happy is the collector who has acquired some of this lovely china of bygone days.

HUKILL'S ANTIQUE CORNER

ROAMING THE SHAVING MUG WORLD

with W. Porter Ware

SHAVING mugs with photographs reproduced upon them, together with names of owners, first appeared in 1895. In that year, the Theo. A. Kochs Company illustrated two such shaving mugs in its catalogue, one of them showing the head and shoulders of Grover Cleveland and the other illustrating Benjamin Harrison. "G. Cleveland" and "B. Harrison" appear, respectively, beneath each photograph, and there is a bit of gold "froo-froo" besides. These mugs are two-thirds life size in the catalogue and below them one reads, "We can reproduce upon these mugs any photograph or tin-type, without defacing or injuring the photograph in any manner. The work is a perfect mechanical reproduction and the result upon the mug is always exactly as good as the photograph which is furnished. If a good photograph is sent, we guarantee a good reproduction upon the mug. The photograph and decoration are thoroughly burned and cannot be effaced".

In their 1896 catalogue, only the mug of Cleveland is illustrated but the same wording appears below it supplemented by this sentence, "Our photograph mugs are the result of years of experimenting, and are strictly high grade".

In 1897, they ran the illustration of Harrison only. But in 1898 photograph mugs were soft pedalled. No description of them can be found in that issue of the catalogue although a lone illustration of the mug of William McKinley appears. This sample was run again without comment through 1900 after which it disappeared. It is true that one could still order the photograph mug for many years for it was listed in tiny lettering among hundreds of other listed decorated shaving mugs as follows: "Photographic mug, gold decoration". It was boosted in price.

Kraut & Dohnal show a sample photograph mug in their 1912 catalogue without comment.

It is not clear why these mugs were not advertised and pushed between 1901 and the tapering off period for decorated shaving mugs, a span of fifteen or twenty years. My own theory is that hand painted occupational shaving mugs, and other decorated shaving mugs, were more popular and perhaps less trouble to turn out. The production of each photograph mug was an individual process from start to finish, hence more costly, whereas many designs for occupational mugs were kept on hand via the steel engraving. Nevertheless, photograph mugs are appealing, whether the head-and-shoulder

LITTLE TALKS with

Gun Collectors

Part IV
Fields for the Novice

IN a previous article I promised to outline fields of firearms collecting in which a novice could enter without endangering his financial solvency. If enough collectors become interested in some of the "lesser breeds" of American or foreign arms, and think less of trying to ape advanced collectors, many of whom have unlimited funds and can safely indulge in rare Colt Paterson pistols, ivory mounted wheellocks and Italian and French masterpieces of the gunmaker's art, prices will become more equalized and everyone will be happier.

It has recently been brought to my attention that a well-known collector, probably disgusted with the prevailing high prices of the more popular collector items, has turned to acquiring for his collection the numerous carbines of the Civil War period in fine condition. Here is a field that the beginning collector can enter, with a minimum of funds, and can gather a fine representative collection of these colorful and historical weapons that will almost certainly advance in price as time goes on and the supply diminishes.

Just to illustrate how wide a field the Civil War carbines include, I shall name some of the various arms in this category. Many of these were made in a number of different models. Here is the list: Ball & Lamson, Ballard, Burnside, Cosmopolitan, Gallagher, Gibbs, Greene, Jenks, Joslyn, Lee, Lindner, Maynard, Merrill, Latrobe & Thomas, Palmer, Peabody, Perry, Sharps. Sharps & Hankins, Smith (a breech loading carbine that used a rubber cartridge), Spencer, Starr, Symes, Triplett & Scott, Warner, Wesson.

Most of the above carbines should be picked up from $8.00 to $20.00, depending upon rarity and condition. Some of the Confederate carbines of the rarer types might run as high as $40.00 or more, but these are few in number.

Incidentally, Civil War muskets, of which there is a wide variety of makes, can be acquired at reasonable prices and make an interesting display. Indeed, the earlier, rarer flintlock muskets of the U. S. have risen proportionately less in price than have many other lines and it is possible for one with a moderate income to acquire practically all of them if he is patient and does a bit of shopping around.

Probably the least expensive line for the collector of limited funds is the large number of early cartridge revolvers, sometimes called "suicide specials", of which there is a wide variety, most of which are nickel plated, sometimes poorly and cheaply constructed, and intended to cut in on the trade created by the glamor of the Colt and Smith & Wesson. example of these is the "Bull Dog", a name usel by a number of makers. Hopkins & Allen made a number of these early revolvers with picturesque names such as "Tramp's Terror," "Blue Jacket," "Dictator," and "Ranger." More About Age Marks

Rocker exemplifying normal wear. Note how much more narrow the rocker is at the center than at the ends.

LAST month's article dealt with a general discussion of age marks on furniture. In this issue, the information will be more specific. To inspire the imagination, the pioneer's cabin was used as an example to unearth valuable indications of genuine antiquity, concentrating on the indispensable corner or wall cupboard.

The drop-leaf table was used for more than just dining. It was a gathering place for the family during winter evenings. It provided writing space, for desks were scarce in pioneer homes. The table top, itself, probably would show the most wear. Scratches, dents and burns were not uncommon. A trivet might have left three small dots—a three-legged pot, larger dots. If there were stretchers between the legs, as on the long square drop-leaf tables they would show wear from heavy boots or shoes rubbed back and forth. This wear would appear on the tops of the stretchers only, and the bottoms would retain the same sharp edges they had when new. Sharp edges will be found on old furniture only on the parts that have been protected from wear—the inside edges of chair legs, the lower edges of table stretchers, the inside edges of the square legs on tables, chairs, or any other cabinet piece.

These same worn places would be found on chair rungs. If the chair has two front rungs, the lower would be worn more than the upper, unless the space between them is too narrow for heavy shoes. The side rungs might show wear on the front end of the lower ones, close to the backs of the front legs.

Slat-back chairs, which have been used in this country since the early 17th century, offer some fine examples of legitimate wear. These chairs usually had four slats, sometimes five. In the earliest of these, the slats were cut straight at the top and bottom. Later the top was slightly pointed, or curved. By the beginning of the 19th century the curved top and straight bottom slat was predominant and during the late 19th century, the slats became much narrower, and somewhat thinner.

Scoring marks were used on the chair posts by the early furniture makers to mark the exact spot for inserting the slats. At shoulder height these scoring marks have almost been obliterated in many of these chairs, while above and below, the marks are plainly visible.

When dinner was over in this imaginary pioneer home, the children would gather around the table, often dragging the chairs from their places by the wall. The chairs would be lifted by the backs, and carried or dragged, in a forward-tipped position. When set in place, the fronts of the front legs would touch the floor first, and after weeks and months of such treatment, the sharp edges would become rounded. Some of the legs on these old chairs have become so worn that the lower rung is hardly more than an inch above the floor.

It was common practice in those early days, to hang a candle holder on the left top slat. Frequently the wood was burned. Such a mark offers an interesting sign of age and record of authenticity. When the chairs were put back into place they usually were dragged backwards, wearing down and rounding the backs of the back legs. The chairs were shoved against the walls, and the walls were rough. Years of such practice resulted in flattened finials.

Rocking chairs can be checked in much the same way as the chairs mentioned above. The legs, however, would not show much wear, and the candle burns would most likely be missing. The rockers, themselves, would betray their age. The center section of the rocker received the most wear and is usually thinner and flatter at that point than at either end. The difference is sometimes as much as half an inch.

In checking furniture for evidences of age, an important point to consider is the color of the wood. Since most furniture was finished only on the exposed surfaces, the undersides of tables, the backs of chests of drawers, the insides of chests, and the sides of the drawers themselves, will reveal much.

Wood darkens with age, and on the backs of dressers, chests, etc., the color usually is a dark brown, and the color at the top of the back will be the

"When Do We Eat?"

by Lillian Robertson

FOR twenty-three years I have tried to bring up my two kids to be gentlemen, and when they come home afternoons, say in a polite manner—especially when it is my turn to entertain the bridge club—(we girls all grew up together, knew each other when, and boast all afternoon about our offsprings)—"Mother, I'm home. Did you have a nice day? How do you do Ladies"—and what do I get? "Hey, Ma, here I am, when do we eat, and what?"

Stomachs are far more important than their brains when it comes five o'clock, and darn their hides, they are flat as pancakes in the front, while I have to struggle into a thirty-four waist girdle to keep up with them. I'm dieting—they're not. It ain't fair!

"When do we eat? When do we eat!" I told them—when Gabriel blew his horn allowing me to enter the Pearly Gates he'd play it to the tune of "Ma, I'm hungry." They had the nerve to say I was too fat to get through the Gates for one thing, and besides, Saint Peter wouldn't let me in because I starved them.

Anyway, we had a grand Fourth of July picnic — boiled lobsters and fixings—everything in the back yard. The kids brought their friends, fireworks and babies—in the order named. Four generations of us — not including George, our mutt with the low I.Q. who was so scared of the firecrackers that he hid himself in the closet under the sink all evening. The babies were carefully parked in the bedroom and had sense enough to sleep all through the racket. The rest of us gained four pounds apiece.

Young married folks are interesting, and it seems, in this day and age, they have enough perception to know that a lot of their family's old furniture and furnishings are "proper" and suitable even for the new homemakers, and valuable enough to keep for themselves and their progeny down through the years. They can tell their children the same stories they have heard ever since they were pups about each chair or piece of glass or silver.

Of course, the more you use silver, the nicer it gets. Washing it carefully in warm water with mild suds, then rinsing and drying, makes for the lovely patina and saves it from becoming corroded. When it is put away for any length of time, it is apt to become pitted and silver polish, no matter how good, cannot restore it.

Salt is the worst enemy—eats right through even sterling,—sulphur, such as fumes from a coal or gas furnace keep you polishing if you want the silver to look nice, but doesn't do as much harm as salt. Anyway, why not use your nicest things all the time—even when you don't have guests? The family likes them and it is good training for the juniors to appreciate the real from the imitation and know how to care for worthwhile things.

One of the girls, who is a lovely young hostess, let her hair down at the picnic and gave out with some good ideas for barbecues in the summertime—also Sunday night suppers when the frost is on the pumpkin. When they have their get-togethers they plan to make it an evening affair so that the men can come. The men, who as usual, have to be dragged to the party, complain—"they won't go on account of the mosquitoes, — and why, for Heaven's sake, can't we have supper in our own dining room" get fooled. She has two old lanterns placed at each end of the table. They were converted so that a candle can be put in them which gives a pleasant light and is a bug repulser. Smells good, too.

She uses big paper napkins with an old flat iron to hold them from blowing away. Another good idea she had was to serve glasses of—er—lemonade in a large old wooden knife box. The glasses fit securely in the box, — it is easy to carry even if the host trips over an ant hill in the dark.

The celery dish is a tin baby chicken feeder that came from an old farm. She painted it black and sticks the celery stalks, leaf side out, through where the chicks are supposed to feed. Scallions, radishes, etc., garnish the top side. Canapes are served on a huge wooden flour shovel with the handle cut short. The old time bakers used these shovels years ago to take flour from the barrels into the bread bins. Them was the days when the boys kneaded the bread by hand, and I'll wager a lot of honest sweat went into the making! The olives, pickles, relish and such were put in muffiin tins, — several of them placed around the table so that there wouldn't be too much passing back and forth.

Sunday night suppers in the fall and winter mean popping corn and roasting hamburgers and hot dogs in the living room fireplace, — and arguments. "Will you please bring in some more wood?" "Oh, heck, I just brought in some, — let Babe do it". "I'm getting everything else ready, beat it out there for the wood, — or else!" "Well, let it be 'or else' then. Why can't we just have plain cheese sandwiches and let it go at that?" "Make tracks, Brother" The calm after the storm when the fireplace is glowing. Embers just right for the hamburgers. The warriors gorging themselves, — the popcorn ready to be popped later. Tranquility.

Do you recall the square tin containers with glass inserted on the four sides to display candy, beans or rice at the old grocery store? They are perfect for pretzels or potato chips. You can take a big fistful and won't get your hand caught in the top. Of course if you are dainty and refined you will only take thirty or forty pretzels at a time, when no one is looking, and trust to luck you won't be going around all evening making

W. PORTER WARE

Sewanee, Tenn.

By Carolyn Fish

SCHOOL bells ringing . . in September, bringing fond memories of long ago. "Still sits the schoolhouse by the road" . . that beloved road we once knew. Enchanted pathway to the circus . . picnics . . Sunday School . . the first party . . the country stores.

But one day our road was obliged to take us to a strange, captive and conventional world that seemed to recognize only the doubtful importance of reading . . . . writing . . . . arithmetic.

Slowly we trudge along . . with reluctant feet clad in yellow button shoes bought last Saturday night at Joe Bowden's store. Our heart is heavy and sad under the new gingham pinafore. Just think . . our doll Phronie is alone in the playhouse . . with the bumpy, blue glass, the miniature coffee grinder, the little iron stove . . . and the zither. (Didn't you know it is simply impossible to play Chautauqua without a zither?)

But the very minute school is dismissed . . we will hurry out . . over the stile and up the road to see Grandma. Grandma will give us the buttered heel of freshly baked bread . . then we'll take our favorite cup plate from the cupboard . . (the purple plate patterned with the tiny star in the middle of the big star) . . and fill it with jam from one of the big stone crocks in the cool cellar. Maybe . . like Grandma says . . school won't be so bad after the first few days . . . . .

Gone are the slates . . the high button shoes . . the funny little lunch pails . . from today's school scene. However, in many homes . . there are prized sets of McGuffey's readers . . six humble books that revolutionized the educational pattern and provided a standard of character building for new America!

William Holmes McGuffey was first to develop graded school studies. He read constantly to children of all ages . . carefully noting how much each child understood and retained. Then McGuffey wrote his famous school primers.

Early education for elementary pupils in America was most inadequate and gloomy—doleful warnings regarding sin, death and eternal punishment were all too often meted out by harsh schoolmasters. The McGuffey readers quickly dispelled such gloom and sorrow . . they gave children delightful stories that carried constructive principles of a life that was full, free and beautiful. Many youngsters learned wisdom through such characters as were portrayed in the fable of the Hare and the Tortoise!

In 1880 . . nearly two million McGuffey readers were printed . . ranking almost at the top of American best sellers. The McGuffey readers are cherished by our early citizens for their priceless lessons in mental discipline and for the reverence and rectitude as taught by a great schoolmaster, William McGuffey.

Early Americana is being featured in hundreds of Western schools . . pupils are delighted to actually see the many, many objects commonly used in the homes of yesterday. Lulu and Dolph Schminck of Lakeview, Oregon . . have for many years encouraged the school children . . from far and near . . to enjoy the wonders and fascinating treasures so beautifully kept and displayed in the Schminck Museum. Young visitors quickly absorb history and geography lessons through Early American glass . . historical china . . the countless relics of pioneer days. Many of the pioneer relics were brought to Lake County by the first settlers in the wagon trains.

Many private collections are being viewed . . in lovely glassed cases . . in school buildings throughout the Western states. Children are seeing for the first time . . an oil lamp burning . . a coal-scuttle shaving mug . . collections of pitchers shaped like animals . . exquisite scrimshaw work . . opaque match holders that resemble one of the Seven Dwarfs. Familiar objects in the lives of collectors . . but new surprises to the majority of boys and girls.

Again the Boston rockers grace the kitchen as in days of yore . . modern mothers realize the value of a kitchen that combines comfort and efficiency . . and a place where the family can enjoy themselves. Even the family bulletin board hangs in an old pine frame . . often with a note like this: 'the Bennington pitcher in the refrigerator is filled with egg-nog . . look in the Meissen jar marked 'Barley' for cookies.' Then while hungry school children snack . . they can play the old phonograph. "Silver Bells" . . "Pop Goes The Weasel" . . "The Preacher and The Bear".

Old-timers in the Northwest were not very impressed with the recent flood . . couldn't understand why everybody got so excited about a little bit of water . . after all, there was a much greater flood . . back in 1894.

Yes . . in 1894 . . with shoulders to the wheel . . business and life went on as usual. Men calmly went to their work in row-boats . . prominent business men rowed and paddled their way through the grand lobby . . of Portland's finest and newest building . . the Commerce Building. Merchandise in the stores was moved to the upper floors . . scaffolding was built high above the sidewalks to accommodate the customers as they came in through the windows. Lamp trimmers continued to trim the lamps while seated in their row-boats.

The Old-timers say . . the flood of 1894 . . caused them a 'little' inconvenience. They also caution us to forever remember . . that nobody should ever attempt to steal the land . . from 'Old Man River'. Because . . someday . . 'Old Man River' will take it right back . . with just interest for unfriendly borrowing!

Goodbye . . until we visit again . . in October.

The STEREOPTICAN

SEPTEMBER — with Labor Day, moving (in a large majority of localities), back to school, and the least cheerful of thoughts being that summer's memories must be packed away with the lawn furniture for at least another nine months. And around the corner with October, Hallowe'en, with November, Thanksgiving, and December, Christmas. While on this latter topic, it might be easier for you who have a lengthy gift list to begin immediately on the whats and from wheres—'specially if you plan to give antiques. This undoubtedly will be right in your line, you who know that there is no gift so welcome to your best friend or relative as an addition to their collection. Has it ever occurred to you that an 'antiques'" remembrance might be equally as welcome to someone who has not as yet 'gotten the bug'? The nicest way we know of doing this so that the recipient will prize and enjoy the gift is to enclose a small card telling them a little of its history, period, original use, pattern, etc. You needn't believe they won't like receiving an antique just because they don't collect, and if they have feigned dislike, except in rare cases, it can be attributed to how little they know about them. A subtle nudge, in the form of a usable, practical, and attractive piece may start your best friend on the road to a happy collecting career. There is something in the antique shop that would make a treasured gift for almost anyone — and because it will take between now and Christmas to make those ultimate decisions, and locate what is suitable, here are a few suggestions. For a young lady in her 'teens—a pattern glass spoonholder to use as a vase in her room; a sterling perfume or pill box of ancient vintage; or a milk white dresser set for her bobbies and bows. For her 'teen age brother, an odd or unusual old pipe (if only for dresser display); or a tricky firearm for the wall in his room; if he's a camera fiend an earlier make may delight him in contrast. For the young matron and her hubby antique shops hold many alluring, usable, and versatile pieces, and even if the couple does not collect antiques, a wager could be laid that their "show off" gift at Xmas will be "this very old piece that 'Aunty' gave us"—but remember the card Aunty, describing the piece, which should make it more of an inspiration for them to start a collection. Even the little kiddies can be pleased with something from the past—a doll; miniature toys for her doll houses; mechanical or still banks for him; tea sets; lovely old marbles. It is an early age that a child should learn how to appreciate, preserve, and enjoy the works of their forefathers! Is there any better way of learning than having something in their possession that through daily contact will establish this link with the past—and enjoyably so at the same time?

So there's no better time than now, and at your leisure, to decide upon Mary's, Johnny's, Mom's, Pop's, and Granny's gifts — from your armchair with a magazine, or on afternoons off during those heretofore casual shopping tours. Gather them one at a time and come the night before Xmas you can be the one to relax and laugh at the confusion of last minute shopping. Buy at least a present a week 'till it's all behind you—then you won't be behind with that Xmas shopping.

And from the reader suggestion box of good and practical ideas—A grand and inexpensive way to file and preserve your copies of "THE SPINNING WHEEL" is to three-hole punch them at the fold and place in a standard 3-ring binder. These binders will hold twenty-four issues and will conserve space as well as being at your fingertips for ready reference.

And the thought for this month, He who will not apply himself to business, eventually discovers that he means to get his bread by cheating, stealing, or begging, or else is wholly void of reason.

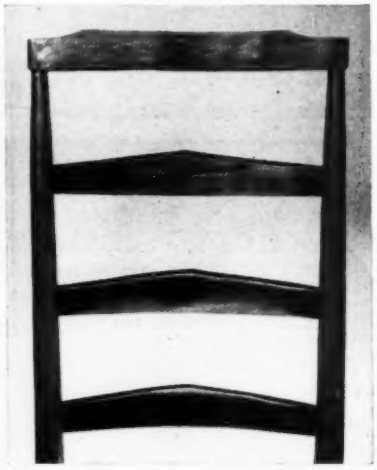
same as the color at the bottom. Insides of dressers and chests usually are not so dark because of less exposure to light, but the lighter color will be uniform on all the inner surfaces. A little practice will make the collector adept at distinguishing naturally aged wood from the attempts of unscrupulous refinishers to disguise new wood with stains and dyes.



Top section of five slat rocker. The scoring marks on the right (from a seated position) are plainly visible, while those on the left (at the 3rd slat) are almost obliterated. This is shoulder height for an average woman. The slats are thicker than most and show much wear. Interesting to note is that the greatest wear on this rocker is on the left side which would indicate that the most frequent occupant must have leaned in that direction. Even the left rocker (see other illus.) and left scoring marks are worn down more than the right side. Wooden pegs can be seen projecting beyond the surface of the top slat whose shape combined with that of the slightly pointed lower slats date the chair in the 17th or early 18th century.

Old furniture that has been painted has its own way of proving its age. Old paint has lost its elasticitiy, because the oil has dried out of it. In scraping a piece of painted furniture, if the paint is old and thick, it will be very brittle and will come off in chips or flakes. New paint will be soft and elastic, and can be peeled off in ribbons or strips. If a piece has had many coats of different colors, the order of the colors should be the same on every section. Sides of drawers and bottoms of chair seats are good places to check, for often they will reveal the various colors to be found on the rest of the piece when the cleaning-off starts.

Every rul has its exception, and in the case of painted furniture, the collector should bear in mind that if a piece has every indication of age except a coat of fresh paint, it does not necessarily mean that the piece is not old. It may be very old, and only picture of doctor, sheriff, soldier, etc. (some executed from the tin-type) or the occupational photograph scene of locomotive, fire-hose cart, and the like. There are examples of some photographic occupationals that were hand colored over the photograph.

The process of reproducing photographs on china is outlined minutely in an article appearing in Popular Photography magazine for October, 1940. Look for it in second-hand magazine stores as the magazine itself cannot spare this particular issue.

Charlotte and Anne Cleveland, comely granddaughters of the late President Grover Cleveland, happen to live in my home town so I made an investigation of them and their father who lives in Baltimore to determine whether or not the President ever used the mug illustrated for him in the 1890's catalogues. I could find no evidence that he possessed the mug and my conclusion is that illustrated samples with photographs of famous men originated in the barber supply company purely for advertising purposes.

Have you ever seen a Toby shaving mug? I am not referring to the several examples of head shaving mugs (Negro head, pig head, Chinaman head, etc.) with which shaving mug collectors are familiar, but to a seated man in whose hat is fashioned the soap repository with its usual drain holes. His legs are crossed and he holds a scroll. There is an opening between his arms much like the space to contain shaving brush appearing in "coal-scuttle" shaving mugs. The mug I describe is of English china but made, no doubt, after the U. S. patent of September 20, 1870, the patent that launched the scuttle type mugs.

You Can Be Sure It's Old

recently brought down from an attic and painted by a member of the third, or even the fourth generation. In buying old furniture, painted, the purchaser should check not only the brittleness of the paint, uniformity of different colors in layers, but all the other marks of age.

Caution should be exercised, too, in selecting painted furniture. If the piece was originally intended as such and has been painted over and over, the collector, in stripping the furniture for refinishing, may find his chair or dresser, made up of several kinds of woods. This, finished in a natural wood finish may not be too pleasing. If it originally was a piece of painted furniture, try to find out how that particular type was finished originally —base color, trim, stencil, etc. Then locate a reliable refinisher and have the piece done over as closely as possible to its original appearance. But do insist that the colors used be faded or muted, so that the piece will appear as it would had it been found in good condition, and normally aged in color. To me there is nothing so garish as Pennsylvania Dutch or New England painted furniture screaming with bright blues, greens, red, and gold—or shiny black.

Next month the subject of old hardware as distinguishing marks of the genuine antique will be discussed.

BOOK REVIEWS

by Martha M. Kephart

New Geography of American Antiques . . . Carl W. Drepperd & Lurelle Arsdale Guild

Any antiques enthusiast will welcome this interesting and highly informative book. Mr. Drepperd, of course, is a recognized authority in this field. His "First Reader for Antiques Collectors" and "Primer of American Antiques" are familiar to everyone who owns or collects antiques.

An outstanding feature of this volume is the presentation of many unusual and very pertinent facts, pertaining to the origin, development and migration of the styles which are now classic. A chapter is devoted to each of the eastern states and their particular contribution. It is amazing to know just how antiques were distributed and the effects that circumstances of certain periods of history had upon them.

Although the authors have concentrated chiefly upon furniture, there are separate chapters devoted to lighting, mirrors, glass, pottery & porcelain, pewter & silver, floor coverings, coverlets & textiles, and clocks. In addition to this, there are 700 illustrations. The text is interspersed with colorful anecdotes, and it is written in a pleasing matter of fact conversational style. While reading it, one feels that it is almost a friendly chat with the authors. "The New Geography of American Antiques" should be owned by every collector, and everyone can gain a great deal by reading it.

LONG AWAITED AND BADLY NEEDED BY COLLECTORS & DEALERS

WE ARE PROUD TO PRESENT— BEGINNING WITH THE OCTOBER ISSUE OF THIS MAGAZINE

Part I of A Series of Articles by

RUTH WEBB LEE

Noted author and accepted authority on EARLY AMERICAN GLASS.

IN this series titled "COLLECTING PATTERN GLASS" Mrs. Lee, in her own inimitable way, will deal seriously with, and clarify many problems for the beginner in regard to fakes and reproductions, as well as ease the mind of the experienced collector on the same subject. She will emphasize lovely patterns that are still available to collect at medium prices; patterns that have not been reproduced; patterns that are reproduced but which can be recognized without difficulty from the reproductions. Each article of the series will be illustrated with identifying features of the topical pattern pointed out so simply that even a laymen will be able to know and buy with confidence.

DON'T MISS THIS EXTRAORDINARY REVELATION on "COLLECTING PATTERN GLASS".

Currier & Ives Prints: also buy them stained, soiled or torn for restoring experiments. Jacques Schurre, 4319 N. 4th Street, Arlington, Virginia. fb
